

Tamanohada, a Japanese company, began making soap in 1892. A simple, round white ball of soap helped launch the company over 125 years ago. Today, a modern-day version of that soap highlights Tamanohada's line of bath products. Infused with pure essential oils of musk, fig, orange, lavender, gardenia, or rose, the smooth, spherical soap rests naturally in your hands as would a fresh snowball.

Tamanohada's "Welcome Soap," a fish-shaped soap trimmed with a natural linen loop, contains the same historical and iconic integrity. The shape portrays the Tai fish, a snapper native to the Western Pacific Ocean. In Japanese culture this fish signifies good fortune and great prosperity, making this soap a welcome bath accessory or gift for any household. Made with certified sustainable palm oil, both soaps are not only items of necessity and sound environmental practices, but are visual and physical joys to hold and behold. Palm oil is low in acidity so it's gentle on your skin.
