

Gudme Leth

Marie Gudme Leth, a renowned Danish textile artist, gained international acclaim for her work. Her iconic Cherry pattern, featuring bright colors and birds among cherry and peach branches, is being reprinted and holds a special place in Danish handicrafts, especially after Queen Ingrid used it to decorate a princess's room. Known for her love of flowers and detailed drafts, Leth drew inspiration from Danish flora, introducing a lush floral style in the early 1940s to bring color and cheer during the dark times of World War II. The Cherry pattern was the first to use a new technique of photographic transfer for precise fabric printing.
